MEMORANDUM OPINION & ORDER

Pending before the Court is Defendant's Motion asking the Court to reduce her sentence of imprisonment (Dkt. #189). The Court, having considered the Motion, the response, the record, and the applicable law, finds that the motion must be DENIED.

I. BACKGROUND

In August 2014, a grand jury named Dozier and three codefendants in a First Superseding Indictment charging them with Conspiracy to Possess with the Intent to Distribute 500 Grams or More of a Mixture or Substance Containing a Detectable Amount of Methamphetamine or 50 Grams or More of Methamphetamine (Actual), in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846 (Dkt. #141 ¶ 3). She pleaded guilty and on May 24, 2016, this Court sentenced her to 215 months in prison (Dkt. #165). Dozier is serving her sentence at FMC Carswell, with an anticipated release date of August 30, 2030. The defendant has served approximately 77 months and has credit for good conduct time of approximately ten months, for total time served of approximately 87 months.

Dozier seeks compassionate release based on her underlying medical conditions and COVID-19, arguing these present "extraordinary and compelling reasons" to grant a sentence reduction. (Dkt. #189). Specifically, she claims that her obesity and hypertension, along with the fact that she is still suffers symptoms from contracting COVID-19, warrant a sentence reduction (Dkt. #189). Additionally, Dozier seeks a Court order to compel the Government to produce her institutional medical records under seal (Dkt. #189). The Government opposes the sentence reduction, arguing that Dozier has not demonstrated “extraordinary and compelling reasons” supporting a sentence reduction (Dkt. #193). Specifically, the Government argues that because Dozier has been vaccinated, she fails to present “extraordinary and compelling reasons” to be granted a sentence reduction (Dkt. #193).

II. LEGAL STANDARD

A judgment of conviction imposing a sentence of imprisonment “constitutes a final judgment and may not be modified by a district court except in limited circumstances.” Dillon v. United States, 560 U.S. 817, 824 (2010) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 3582(b)); see also 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c). One such circumstance arises from 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A), the statute authorizing compassionate release. Under § 3582(c)(1)(A), a district court may grant a sentence reduction if it finds: (1) a defendant “fully exhausted all administrative rights”; (2) “extraordinary and compelling reasons warrant such a reduction”; (3) “such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission”; and (4) such a reduction is appropriate “after considering the factors set forth in § 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable.” 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A).

The First Step Act of 2018 made the first major changes to compassionate release since its authorization in 1984. Pub. L. 115-391, 132 Stat. 5194. Procedurally, the First Step Act removed the Director of the BOP as the sole arbiter of compassionate release. Instead, the law enabled a defendant to move for compassionate release directly in district court after exhausting their administrative rights. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). Prior to this change, the BOP retained sole gatekeeping authority over compassionate release petitions. United States v. Brooker, 976 F.3d 228, 232 (2d Cir. 2020). This resulted in underuse and mismanagement.¹ Id. Through the First Step Act, Congress sought to mitigate this by “increasing the use and transparency of compassionate release” Pub. L. 115-391, 132 Stat. 5194, 5239 (capitalization omitted).

Substantively, the First Step Act also modified the “extraordinary and compelling reasons” determination. Congress never defined what constitutes “extraordinary and compelling,” but rather delegated this determination to the Sentencing Commission.² By the text of § 3582(c)(1)(A), any sentence reduction must be “consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission.” However, since passage of the First Step Act, the Sentencing Commission has not updated its guidelines on compassionate release.³ This has created significant disagreement across the country whether the pre-First Step Act policy statement is still “applicable,” and thus binding on district courts.

The Fifth Circuit recently joined the Second, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, and Tenth Circuits in concluding that § 1B1.13 is no longer binding on a district court. See United States v. Shkambi, 2021 WL 1291609, at *4 (5th Cir. 2021) (“The district court on remand is bound only by § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i) and, as always, the sentencing factors in § 3553(a). In reaching this conclusion, we align with every circuit court to have addressed the issue.”). Under this new framework,

² In 28 U.S.C. § 994(a)(2), Congress granted the Commission broad authority to promulgate “general policy statements regarding application of the guidelines or any other aspect of sentencing or sentence implementation that in the view of the Commission would further the purposes set forth in [18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)].” And in 28 U.S.C. § 994(t), “Congress instructed the Commission to ‘describe what should be considered extraordinary and compelling reasons for sentence reduction, including the criteria to be applied and a list of specific examples.’” United States v. Garcia, 655 F.3d 426, 435 (5th Cir. 2011) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 994(t)).

³ The Sentencing Commission currently lacks a quorum to issue new guidelines.

§ 1B1.13 still binds district courts on motions made by the BOP, but, for motions made directly by an inmate, district courts are free to consider any relevant fact in determining if “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist. See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 235–36 (because the First Step Act allows both inmates and the BOP to file compassionate-release motions under § 3582(c)(1)(A), § 1B1.13 now applies only when such motions are made by the BOP and is inapplicable when a compassionate-release motion is made by a defendant); United States v. McCoy, 981 F.3d 271, 282 (4th Cir. 2020) (“A sentence reduction brought about by motion of a defendant, rather than the BOP, is not a reduction ‘under this policy statement.’”); United States v. Gunn, 980 F.3d 1178, 1180 (7th Cir. 2020) (agreeing with Brooker and holding that there is no “applicable” policy statement for § 3582(c)(1)(A) motions after the First Step Act); United States v. Jones, 980 F.3d 1098, 1109 (6th Cir. 2020) (“Until the Sentencing Commission updates § 1B1.13 to reflect the First Step Act, district courts have full discretion in the interim to determine whether an ‘extraordinary and compelling’ reason justifies compassionate release”).

Despite this newfound discretion, district courts are not without guidance in determining whether “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist. First, Congress has explicitly limited that “[r]ehabilitation of the defendant alone shall not be considered an extraordinary and compelling reason. 28 U.S.C. § 994(t) (emphasis added). Second, the Sentencing Commission’s policy statement and commentary is still persuasive. United States v. Logan, No. 97-CR-0099(3), 2021 WL 1221481 (D. Minn., Apr. 1, 2021) (finding that § 1B1.13’s definition of “extraordinary and compelling” should be afforded “substantial deference . . . as such deference is consistent with the intent (even if not mandated by the letter) of § 3582(c)(1)(A)”). Application Note 1 of the policy statement provides that “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist when: (1) a terminal illness or other medical condition “substantially diminishes the ability of the defendant to provide self-care within the environment of a correctional facility”; (2) a defendant, who is at least 65 years old, “is experiencing a serious deterioration in physical or mental health because of the aging process” and “has served at least 10 years or 75 percent of his or her term of imprisonment”; and (3) a defendant has minor children without a caregiver or with an incapacitated spouse or partner who needs the defendant to be the caregiver. U.S.S.G. § 1B1.13, n.1(A)-(C). Lastly, BOP Program Statement 5050.50 (“PS 5050.50”), amended after passage of the First Step Act, describes the factors BOP considers grounds for compassionate release. See PS 5050.50 ¶¶ 3–6. These grounds are similar to the reasons identified by the Sentencing Commission, but also include a list of factors like rehabilitation and circumstances of the offense.⁴ Id.

Building from this guidance, district courts across the country have identified additional situations where “extraordinary and compelling reasons” exist. First, while rehabilitation alone is not an “extraordinary and compelling” reason for a sentence reduction, it can be a significant factor warranting a sentence reduction when an inmate has an otherwise qualifying condition.⁵ See United States v. Rodriguez, 451 F.Supp.3d 392, 405 (E.D. Pa. 2020) (noting that the Sentencing Commission itself interpreted § 3582(c)(1)(A) as allowing consideration of an inmate’s rehabilitation). If an inmate demonstrates a long, comprehensive record of rehabilitation, it goes to whether injustice would result if they remain incarcerated. See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 238 (identifying “the injustice of [a] lengthy sentence” as a factor that may weigh in favor of a sentence reduction). Second, courts consider any changes in law and the sentencing guidelines when determining if a sentence is extraordinary. For example, courts grant compassionate release at a remarkable rate for inmates subject to the now abolished § 924(c) sentence-stacking. See McCoy, 981 F.3d at 285 (“As the court observed in Bryant, multiple district courts have concluded that the severity of a § 924(c) sentence, combined with the enormous disparity between that sentence and the sentence a defendant would receive today, can constitute an “extraordinary and compelling” reason for relief under § 3582(c)(1)(A)”). Though Congress did not retroactively eliminate § 924(c) sentence-stacking, courts consider whether the outdated policy warrants relief on a case-by-case basis.⁶

⁴ PS 5050.50’s nonexclusive factors are: “the defendant’s criminal and personal history, nature of his offense, disciplinary infractions, length of sentence and amount of time served, current age and age at the time of offense and sentencing, release plans, and ‘[w]hether release would minimize the severity of the offense.’” United States v. Saldana, 807 F. App’x 816, 819 (10th Cir. 2020) (quoting PS 5050.50 ¶ 7).

Even if extraordinary and compelling reasons exist, they must outweigh the 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) factors to warrant sentence reduction. See 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). These factors are:

- (1) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant;
- (2) the need for the sentence imposed—
 - (A) to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for the law, and to provide just punishment for the offense;
 - (B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct;
 - (C) to protect the public from further crimes of the defendant; and
 - (D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner;
- (3) the kinds of sentences available;
- (4) the kinds of sentence and sentencing range [provided for in the U.S.S.G.] . . .
- (5) any pertinent [Sentencing Commission] policy statement . . .
- (6) the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct; and

⁶ See Shon Hopwood, Second Looks & Second Chances, 41 CARDOZO L. REV. 83, 123-24 (2019) (arguing Congress did not make § 924(c) sentence stacking retroactive because it did not want to make all inmates “categorically” eligible for sentencing relief, but Congress meant for relief from draconian sentences to apply “individually”)

(7) the need to provide restitution to any victims of the offense.

Id. § 3553(a).

III. DISCUSSION

Dozier moves for compassionate release based on her rheumatoid arthritis, obesity, high blood pressure, and hypertension. Dozier argues these medical conditions, coupled with the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, warrant a sentence reduction. The Government argues Dozier's conditions are not severe enough to qualify for compassionate release.

Although Dozier has met § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement, she has not met the statute's requirement that "extraordinary and compelling reasons" exist warranting a reduction of her sentence. Dozier's motion, therefore, must be denied.

A. Dozier Has Met § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s Exhaustion Requirement.

Dozier's compassionate release motion may only be considered if she first meets § 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement. Courts may not consider a modification to a defendant's sentence under § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i) unless a motion for such a modification is properly made by the Director of the BOP or by a defendant who has fully exhausted their administrative remedies. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). Fully exhausting administrative remedies requires a denial by the warden of a defendant's facility or waiting thirty days without receiving a response to a request.⁷ Id.

Section 3582(c)(1)(A)'s exhaustion requirement is not waivable. See United States v. Rivas, 833 F. App'x 556, 558 (5th Cir. 2020) ("Because the statutory language is mandatory—that a prisoner must exhaust their BOP remedy before filing in district court—we must enforce this procedural rule . . .”); United States v. Reeves, No. 18-00294, 2020 WL 1816496, at *2 (W.D. La. Apr. 9, 2020) (“While the Court is well aware of the effects the Covid-19 pandemic . . . § 3582(c)(1)(A) does not provide this Court with the equitable authority to excuse Reeves' failure to exhaust his administrative remedies or to waive the 30-day waiting period.”). If a defendant has not sought relief from the BOP, or has not waited thirty days since seeking relief, the Court may not consider their motion.

On July 29, 2020, Dozier asked the warden at FMC Carswell to grant her compassionate release and more than 30 days passed without a response. Dozier has, therefore, met § 3582(c)(1)(A)’s exhaustion requirement.

B. Dozier Has Not Met § 3582(c)(1)(A)’s Requirement that “Extraordinary and Compelling Reasons” Warrant a Sentence Reduction.

Dozier’s compassionate release motion turns on her assertion that the risks to her health associated with COVID-19—coupled with her underlying health conditions—constitute extraordinary and compelling reasons to reduce her sentence. Dozier’s assertion fails because her conditions are not severe enough to constitute “extraordinary and compelling reasons” under § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i).

The Court has discretion to decide whether Dozier’s conditions present “extraordinary and compelling reasons” warranting a sentence reduction. See Shkambi, 2021 WL 1291609, at *4. The Court is not bound by the Sentencing Commission’s policy statement and may consider any relevant facts in evaluating Dozier’s condition of incarceration. Id. Typically, courts consider whether a defendant suffers from a serious health condition, has a record of rehabilitation, the nature and circumstances of defendant’s offense, and whether a sentence is based on outdated law. See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 238.

Rehabilitation alone cannot support a claim for sentence reduction but may be considered as a factor in evaluating “extraordinary and compelling reasons.” See Brooker, 976 F.3d at 237-38; United States v. Hudec, No. 4:91-1-1, 2020 WL 4925675, at *5 (S.D. Tex. Aug. 20, 2020). Here, Dozier has not remained incident free as she has been found in possession of an unauthorized item while serving her sentence. She has also served less than 50% of her sentence. Accordingly, the Court does not find that Dozier’s rehabilitative record supports her release.

When considering if a defendant’s health condition supports compassionate release, the mere existence of COVID-19 in society cannot independently justify a sentence reduction. See United States v. Miller, No. 2:17-CR-015-D, 2020 WL 2514887, *2 (N.D. Tex. May 15, 2020) (citing United States v. Raia, 954 F.3d 594, 597 (3d Cir. 2020)). For a defendant to be granted compassionate release based on COVID-19, defendant must have a serious comorbidity and evidence the facility is not effectively controlling the spread of the virus. See United States v. Vasquez, No. CR 2:18-1282-S-1, 2020 WL 3000709, at *3 (S.D. Tex. June 2, 2020) (“General concerns about the spread of COVID-19 or the mere fear of contracting an illness in prison are insufficient grounds to establish the extraordinary and compelling reasons necessary to reduce a sentence.”).

In the instant case, Dozier fails to show any health conditions that warrant compassionate release. Dozier is not subject to a terminal illness. Dozier’s conditions do not substantially diminish her ability to provide self-care in prison. Dozier is fully vaccinated. Further, rheumatoid arthritis, obesity, high blood pressure, and hypertension are insufficient to constitute an “extraordinary and compelling reason” alone unless combined with other extenuating circumstances. See United States v. Manzano, No. 16-cr-20593, 2020 WL 7223301, at *3–4 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 8, 2020) (collecting cases and finding hypertension and diabetes were “extraordinary and compelling” when combined with defendant’s age and the lack of health protections implemented by her facility); see also United States v. Guyton, No. 11-271, 2020 WL 2128579, at *3 (E.D. La. May 5, 2020) (denying compassionate release for a 45-year-old with mild hypertension).

However, the court also acknowledges that, according to the CDC website, some of Dozier’s underlying medical conditions—specifically hypertension and obesity—make her more likely to become severely ill should she contract COVID-19. But such commonplace medical conditions do not make Dozier’s case “extraordinary.” See United States v. Terry, No. 4:16-CR-101(12), 2021 WL 4226053, at *3 (E.D. Tex. Sept. 15, 2021) (finding that although inmate suffered from diabetes, hypertension, hypothyroidism, morbid obesity, fatty liver, hyperlipidemia, and a large hernia, her conditions were not “extraordinary” to merit release). For example, according to the CDC, 42.5% of the adult population in the United States is obese, and 45% has hypertension. As the court in Terry recognized, due to their pervasiveness, obesity and hypertension cannot be considered “extraordinary” to merit a sentence reduction. Id. (citing cases).

Moreover, as Dozier acknowledges, she has received the COVID-19 vaccine. This similarly precludes eligibility for compassionate release. See, e.g., United States v. Smith, No. 17-CR-20753, 2021 WL 36436, AT *2 (E.D. Mich. Feb 3, 2021) (“[A]bsent some shift in the scientific consensus, Defendant’s vaccination against COVID-19 precludes the argument that his susceptibility to the disease is ‘extraordinary and compelling’”); see also United States v. Grummer, 519 F.Supp.3d 760, 763 (S.D. Cal. Feb 16, 2021) (“Although Defendant suffers from severe chronic medical conditions, his vaccination significantly mitigates the risk that he will contract COVID-19.”). Further, Dozier contracted COVID-19 in December 2020, and recovered from it without significant consequence. Finally, her age of 52 also does not support compassionate release.

Absent COVID-19, Dozier would present no basis for compassionate release because her medical ailments are appropriately managed and do not impede her ability to provide self-care in the institution. Further FMC Carswell reports only four active cases among inmates and twelve among staff. Federal Bureau of Prisons, COVID-19 Cases, <https://www.bop.gov/coronavirus/> (last visited Oct. 18, 2021). Though the allegations of lackadaisical protocols at FMC Carswell are disturbing, Dozier fails to present evidence demonstrating a serious risk to her health.

Weighing the evidence, Dozier fails to prove that her incarceration is “extraordinary and compelling” under § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i) framework. See United States v. Stowe, No. CR H-11-803(2), 2019 WL 4673725, at *2 (S.D. Tex. Sept. 25, 2019) (citation omitted) (stating that the defendant generally “has the burden to show circumstances meeting the test for compassionate release”).⁸

* * *

Under the rule of finality, federal courts may not “modify a term of imprisonment once it has been imposed” unless one of a few “narrow exceptions” applies. Freeman v. United States, 564 U.S. 522, 526 (2011) (citing 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)) (plurality op.); see also Dillon, 560 U.S. at 819 (same). Compassionate release is one of those exceptions, but a defendant must conform both to the procedural and substantive requirements of § 3582(c)(1)(A) for a court to modify a sentence. Because Dozier has failed to meet the controlling requirements for compassionate release set forth in § 3582(c)(1)(A)(i), her Motion must be denied.⁹

⁹ In the alternative, the Court is also unable to order home confinement. The BOP has exclusive authority to determine where a prisoner is housed; thus, the Court is without authority to order home confinement. 18 U.S.C. § 3621(b); see

IV. CONCLUSION

It is therefore ORDERED that Defendant's motion asking the Court to reduce her sentence of imprisonment (Dkt. #189) is DENIED.

Further, since the government produced Dozier's medical records in its response, it is ORDERED that Defendant's request for the Government to produce her medical records is DENIED AS MOOT.

SIGNED this 25th day of October, 2021.
